

The Propaganda Inundation

6/2/14

It's barely stopped raining for 7 weeks but the rising flood waters are nothing compared with our incessant inundation by feminist propaganda. The last thing I heard on the TV before I went to bed last night was a piece on female genital mutilation on the main BBC 1 News at 10 o'clock. They interviewed one girl victim. When I arose this morning and pick up the newspaper from the front door, what do I see but a picture of this same girl on the front page. Half the front page is occupied with an article on female genital mutilation. And inside there is a double page spread on female genital mutilation. By the time I reach the kitchen with the newspaper, the Today programme on Radio 4 is up to its Thought For The Day slot. It's a woman reminding us, in case we had forgotten, about the issue of violence against women and girls. And a minute or two later there's another item on discrimination against women in Muslim societies.

The frustrating thing is that so very few people realise that these 'news' items are thrown at us by the feminist propaganda machine. The propaganda machine has only two strategies: man shaming and female victimising. To put it more simply the two strategies are: "men bad" and "women good" respectively. More of the man shaming approach another day. The "women good" half of the pincer movement consists of females, and only females, being permitted to be seen as the victims - of anything. It consists of females being in sole possession of the moral high ground. When the feminist machine throws out articles on violence against women, or female genital mutilation, or rape, or people saying nasty things about women on twitter, it's all about maintaining the illusion that women are the poor, down-trodden, disadvantaged, discriminated victims of society.....and therefore deserve cookies. Give us the cookies! It's not even about genuine concern. There are, of course, real female victims of all these things - and I reiterate for the millionth time - I am equally compassionate towards any genuine victim regardless of sex (unlike feminists). But the feminist machine is concerned with these issues only because they are the mechanism which props up their power base.

So, I shall be sending another letter to the newspaper and/or the BBC. Let me rehearse it for you...

Any decent person must abhor that there are 66,000 victims of female genital mutilation in the UK. But where is the compassion for the male victims of genital mutilation? The myths are that male circumcision does no harm, that it confers health benefits, and that it predominantly affects Jews and Muslims. These claims are all untrue. About 16% of UK males have been circumcised (5 million men) compared with 5% of the population who are Jewish or Muslim. The origin of non-religious male circumcision lies in the Victorians' obsession with 'curing' masturbation. Circumcision was intended from the start to degrade sexual function, and it does. It is harmful not benign. Claims of health benefits have been repeatedly discredited. And whilst female genital mutilation is illegal in the UK, the existing victims having been mutilated whilst abroad, in the case of men the mutilation is carried out here in the UK, with specialist clinics openly advertising their nasty trade.