

Who Are The Sick Fucks?

One of the things which betrays the sickness of the feminist mindset most clearly is that their misandry has no age limit. If it were just adult men they hated people might see it as fair game. But, no. It is also boys of the tenderest age which they loath. And, led by the feminists, this demonisation of small boys is now endemic in society generally.

After the following story, taken from Ref.[1], there will be a multi-choice quiz - so pay attention. In 2014 a 5-year-old boy in Arizona, Eric Lopez, was accused of sexual misconduct for pulling down his pants in the playground. He was in the playground at his elementary school when another student told him to pull his pants down or else he would do it for him. In other words, he was being bullied. He complied, pulling down his pants and underwear in front of several other children. When teachers saw what happened, they hauled Eric into the principal's office where he was forced to sign a document that labelled his actions "sexual misconduct." Eric received detention as punishment.

Dysart Unified School District policy labels indecent exposure as a form of sexual misconduct. Under the district rules, administrators must present the student with the accusations, but they are not required to have a parent present for the meeting unless a student specifically asks for his or her parent to be there. Eric's mother said her son did not know he had the right to do that and signed the documents because school administrators told him to. Do recall that this is a five year old we're dealing with here.

Eric now has a sexual misconduct finding on his permanent file. Note the complete absence of any due process. Eric was 'convicted' by the school's principal without the opportunity for any defence. Eric's mother tried to appeal the label in her son's permanent file. The school responded in a letter saying it followed proper procedures and protocols. The stain on Eric's character remains.

So here is your exam question: "Who is the sick fuck in this story?" Is it,

- (i) Five year old Eric;
- (ii) Eric's mother;
- (iii) The teachers, and particularly the principal, of Eric's elementary school for projecting their own ideologically based, neurotic sexual insecurities onto an innocent child?

Oops, sort of gave it away there, didn't I?

Where is the wisdom in our society now? It has been driven away by the jack-boot of totalitarian feminism.

Here is another little story for you, from Ref.[2]. Before I relate it, consider this scenario. A 14 year old boy was babysitting an 8 year old girl. Whilst alone with her, the boy coerced the girl into touching his penis. Would anyone regard the girl to be at fault in this scenario? Of course not. But virtually everyone would regard the boy to have committed a crime and a serious breach of trust. Well, that's not the story. The story from Ref.[2] is this. A mother left her 8 year old boy in the charge of a 14 year old female babysitter. They engaged in a game of truth or dare (I wonder whose idea that was). The babysitter dared the 8 year old boy to touch her breasts. He did.

Afterwards the mother sensed that something wasn't quite right with this 14-year-old girl and quizzed her son as to what had happened. He told her all about it quite openly. Outraged, the mother complained to police and child protection workers. The case went to the district attorney, after which her 8 year old son was charged with an act of lewdness with a minor.

Yes, you read that right. The 8 year old boy was charged with sexual assault of the 14 year old babysitter. This is the extent to which the presumption of "male bad, female good", "girl victim, boy villain" has been indelibly stamped onto our culture. As I pointed out above, if the genders were reversed there is no possibility whatsoever that the 8 year old would be held to blame. But blame is assigned, not based on any just criterion, but solely on the basis that the male is always the guilty party, irrespective of age. The only total innocent party here is the 8 year old boy. The 14 year old girl is suspect, of course, but the truly sick fucks are the authorities whose gender bias is destroying our world.

These are not isolated incidents but are now characteristic of the reaction of society to boys. An example from an Australian primary school is the radio recording of Ref.[3] - go to just before minute 51. Kate tells us of how her 5 year old son took a bunch of flowers to give to a girl in his class whom he thought was pretty. For this he was told off by the teacher - because he was, and I quote "sexualising the little girl". It was Valentine's Day - and the girls had been free to put up pictures of boys they liked, apparently. As the mother, Kate, fully understood, this is simply anti-boy discrimination. Our teaching unions are overtly feminist. Take a look at their web sites if you doubt it. What chance do little boys stand in their hands? Do not waste your breath discussing the dictionary definition of feminism. Judge the tree by its fruits. The rank fruits of feminism are the demonisation of innocent little boys. Feminism is toxic, it is a philosophy of gender hate, it has to go.

Does this make you wonder just how feminists cope when they have a son? It should. The answer is that such women have broadly three different reactions. The first is that having a son makes them realise that they have been in error. These women renounce their feminism, often very emphatically. Many, perhaps most, of female MRAs come to the movement in this way.

The second kind of feminist-with-a-son are terminally confused by the conflict between loving their sons and hating males. Here is an example from the blog of a woman, K.M.O'Sullivan, Ref.[4], with three sons,

"I am a mother raising the enemy....Sons,... You are male. You have to pay for the sins of those who came before."

"Sons, yes, love is wonderful BUT you are not allowed to love. You must check your feelings at the door because every action you make as a male will be held against you. You are guilty until proven innocent, and are always on probation. It's not your fault. Your purest intentions, your deepest respect for others, will simply not be enough."

"We've raised you to believe in the ideas of equality and fairness but this world we are giving you is broken and chaotic."

But Mrs O'Sullivan fails to acknowledge that it is she and her kind who have broken this world. It is she herself who has gratuitously fabricated a history of oppression for which men, all men, must pay. It is she who has insisted on revenge and retribution for imagined ills. And she failed to include an exclusion clause for her own sons, as did every other woman - and all men are sons.

"NO MEANS NO is ambiguous because NO is a moving target, an ever-moving line that changes partner to partner, day to day, mood to mood. Where NO was yesterday, it may not be today. Where NO was ten minutes ago, it may not be now. How the hell do we teach our sons to read THAT map?"

You cannot navigate that map, Mrs O'Sullivan because you and your kind have erected your own power centre around the impossibility of doing so. You have ensured - deliberately - that males can always be put in the wrong at the whim of woman. It is your doing. You have pissed in the faces of your own sons in the name of your own sanctimonious self interest. Your sons have my sympathy. You will get none. You are another sick fuck.

And finally there is the third kind. The kind of feminist whose dedication to the ideology is unphased by having sons. Such a one is Hannah Rosin who calls her son obnoxious in public writing, Ref.[5]. Yes, this woman who has the power to reach a mass audience denigrates her own son in the service of her vile ideology - a boy who is powerless to answer back, having not her access to mass media. She is another sick fuck.
